Last week we discussed the proposition that a hospital Chaplain is a representative of God in a manner similar to others who serve in the hospital and is also a minister in a way different from the others. Today, we come to the hospital Chaplain as a member of the healing team.

In the last generation, medical science dealt primarily with the diseased organ to the exclusion somewhat of the personality of the individual. Today, on the growing edge' of medicine, the new concepts is a comprehensive approach to the patient which includes the physiological, somatical, psychological, and spiritual factors of the patient's life.

Some medical authorities have stated that at least one-third of all patients who consult physicians today do not have identifiable body diseases to account for their illness. In other words, the individual's way of 'life'— his way of meeting life's situations, his attitudes and motivations — may foster sickness or facilitate health. This fact introduces the chaplain as a working member of the healing team' because . . . Christian theology boldly states the relevance of Christianity to all areas of life and the necessity of wholesome relationships to oneself, to one's fellow man, and to God. Thus the accumulated knowledge of personality development garnered by scientific methods in recent years, coupled with a genuine love for people, can be a golden key in the hands of the chaplain to open doors through which Christ may enter into the lives of people.

The Chaplain is not a cure-all: he is not a glorified errand boy; he is not a person to be used as an axe over someone's head; he is not primarily a person to pronounce judgement and woe upon wicked sinners — he may have to do all of this and more! But essentially he is a working member of this healing team which is concerned about the total welfare of the whole person—physically, mentally, and spiritually.

The Chaplain may be needed for support, for consolation, for guidance, for encouragement, for

"I Suits Me"

Lesson for March 21, 1965

What happens to people who think they are "the greatest?" There used to be a comic opera solo, "I Suits Me." In the stage version of the play this was a kind of joke. But when a man or woman really thinks he or she is beyond comparison or criticism, when a man begins to suit himself exactly, so much so that he can't see the slightest need for improvement — watch out! No form of human life is more dangerous and unpleasant than the conceited man.

Jesus had trouble with such people. All his life he was acquainted with them, during his time as a teacher they hastened him, and in the end they brought about his death. Seen from the viewpoint of the centuries, it may seem ridiculous, or outrageous, depending on your temperament somewhat! that there are those who flaunt they knew better and were better than Jesus; but such men there were, and very well satisfied with themselves. Indeed, there were men who made a specialty of being good, you might call them professional saints. They spent their time studying the laws of God, writing commentaries on them and trying to observe them. They were called Pharisees, from a Hebrew word meaning "separated," referring to the fact that they regarded themselves as much too good to associate with ordinary people. Jesus had very little use for them. Most of the time he gave them the silent treatment. With a sincere pharisee like Nicodemus he would talk courteously; but toward the end of his career he was so routed by the meanness of most of them that he made some bitter remarks in public about this League of Conceited Men.

One thing he said about them was that when they went to drink, they would strain the gnats out of the drinking water (Palestine being a hot country) and then swallow a camel. Of course this was a bit of sarcasm. What he meant is plain: these professional saints got all upside down in their ideas of right and wrong. They were too dainty to swallow a gnat, but had no objection to camels in the rough. They kept the smaller laws but they paid no attention to the big laws of justice, mercy and faith.

Children of Hell

Jesus seldom used harsh language, but he used some very hard words to describe Pharisees. He called them camels' humps, concealed men as foolish, and if "blind guides" makes them look ridiculous, "children of hell" marks them as downright bad.

Those Pharisees were always on the lookout for young people who could make good Pharisee material, as we would say; they made converts to the Club for the Complacent and Conceited; but Jesus did not think well of this. Anyone who goes around yelling "I am the best" may attract a few disciples; but most people with some honest and humility can see through the self-satisfied man. So, what happens to even a good man who becomes proud of his own goodness? He separates himself from God, his pride is a house without windows, in which he sits isolated from God and his fellow men, beyond the reach of either. "I Suits Me" may be a comic song, but when you begin to suit yourself better than anyone else suits you — look out! The Pharisee disease can ruin you.

Forty percent of the victims of poisons in the home are children four years old or younger. Hundreds of youngsters in this age group die every year from poisons which parents or guardians had nelected to keep in a locked cabinet or chest. The poisons to keep from youngsters include liquid cleaners, paint thinners, varnishes, bleaches, rubbing alchohol, kerosene, removers of fingernail polishes, hair tonic, aspirin and various other medicines, in addition to such poisons as insecticides, rodent killers which contain arsenic or phosphorus or stychine or bichloride of mercury, etc. Are poisons in your home kept locked in a cabiner or chest? Although many of today's citizens find it rather difficult to quit smoking, it was no problem at all to kick the habit in olden times. Long ago the Shah Abbas of Persia, for example, discovered smoking by having molten lead poured down the throats of offenders. Tobacco merchants along with their stock were consigned to flames. The merchants fared a little better in Czarist Russia; they were merely whipped in public.
